Value Proposition Canvas

Designed for:	Designed by:	Date:	Version:
Learning to Love What Is Ugly	Mariam Hegab	05/10/2026	1.0

Products and Services

- Flesh-like organic sculpture broken by metal, fragments and rigid structure
- Projection on and around the form
- Distance sensor tracking the viewer
- Responsive sound

Gain Creators

- Moving closer warms the projection and softens the sound, so attention is rewarded
- Detail and texture only reveal themselves up close
- The visit unfolds as a ritual: rejection, then attention, then tenderness

Pain Relievers

- The viewer controls the distance; nothing forces contact
- Disgust is expected and allowed at the start
- Projected questions name the reaction without blame
- A shared room shows others feel it too

Gains

- Seeing a rejected form as warm, even intimate
- Words for their own reactions
- Softness reframed as a kind of power
- A ritual of looking they can carry into daily life

Customer Jobs

- Look at their own body without flinching
- Understand why they feel disgust or shame
- Feel less alone in that feeling
- Find a safe space to sit with discomfort

Pains

- Shame learned early from media, peers and family
- The reflex to hide, cover or correct
- Softness read as weakness, imperfection as ugliness
- Few places to feel discomfort without being judged

Value Proposition

An installation that turns disgust into intimacy: the closer you come to a form you want to reject, the warmer it becomes, until you begin to see it, and yourself, differently.

Customer Segment

Adolescents and women who carry shame about their bodies and the parts of themselves they were taught to hide.

Design and Copyright by: Strategyzer AG (https://www.strategyzer.com/). PowerPoint implementation by: Neos Chronos Limited (https://neoschronos.com). Adobe PDF implementation License: CC BY-SA 3.0